This is a rematch of a growing AFC rivalry with JAX 2-1 SU/ATS in the L/3 meetings, and JAX is hosting after winning the AFC South and finishing 13-4 SU with a strong 12-5 ATS mark. BUF is back at 12-5 SU but they've been a subpar cover team (8-9 ATS) and their road playoff profile has been shaky, including 0-4 ATS in their L/4 playoff road games. Coaching leans experience with McDermott 5-6 in the postseason, while this is JAX HC Liam Coen's first playoff game.

BUF's identity is still Allen + run game. QB Josh Allen threw for 3,668 yds (25-10) and added 579 rush yds with 14 rush TD's, which keeps them dangerous even when the pass game stalls. The ground attack was elite with 2,714 rush yds (5.0) led by RB Cook (1,621 at 5.2), and that's how BUF can control this matchup. The concern is variance in these spots: Allen is 5-8 ATS in his playoff career and BUF has struggled covering on the road in January/postseason settings. If the game turns into a pure shootout, BUF is playing more from volatility than efficiency.

JAX is the hotter and steadier side entering the postseason. They've won 8 straight SU/ATS and they were 12-5 ATS on the year. QB Lawrence threw for 4,007 yds with a 29-12 ratio, and they've been balanced with 1,956 rush yds behind RB Etienne (1,107 at 4.3). The pass game has real chunk ability with WR Washington (847) and Thomas (707), and they've gotten TE production from Strange (540). Defensively, JAX has playmaking production that shows up in the box score with Lloyd (5 INT) and Antonio Johnson (5 INT) plus a pass rush anchor in Hines-Allen (8 sks). This is a team that's been closing drives and winning the margin weekly.

PP calls for the Under, with the computer projecting a total of 45 points versus a market total of 52.5. The matchup projects a more controlled game: BUF leans run-first at 186 rush yds with just 165 pass yds, while JAX's scoring edge comes from the hidden yardage with a massive projected TO margin (+13) and a big ST gap (#5 vs #26). That TO/ST combo can create short fields, but it also keeps the game from turning into a clean, sustained shootout when drives get disrupted and field position swings. With wind expected to be a factor, that only adds to the difficulty of consistently hitting explosives and finishing drives. With 45 projected vs 52.5, we'll take the Under.

This is the first playoff meeting between these clubs. LAR is back in the postseason after going 12-5 SU/ATS and they've been in playoff mode most of the year with Stafford healthy. CAR won the NFC South for the first time since 2015 and they're hosting as the biggest home dog in playoff history. LAR HC McVay is 8-7 in the playoffs and this is CAR HC Canales' first postseason game.

The Rams offense was explosive all year with QB Stafford throwing for 4,707 yds with a 46-8 ratio. They were balanced too, running for 2,152 yds (4.6) with RB Williams (1,252) and Corum (746) both popping big chunks. WR Nacua (129-1,715-10) was the engine and WR Adams is expected back (hamstring), which matters in a game where LAR is laying big chalk on the road. TE Ferguson missed LW and even if active he's been more rotational with Higbee back plus Parkinson has been a red zone factor (8 TD). LAR has been money ATS in January (7-0 ATS), but big road favs in the playoffs have historically been a tough cover profile.

CAR's path has been unique: all 8 wins came as underdogs and they've leaned into playing from the underdog chair. QB Bryce Young threw for 3,011 yds with a 23-11 ratio and CAR ran for 1,977 yds (4.3) led by RB Dowdle (1,076). WR McMillan (70-1,014-7) is their top target. Defensively, CAR has forced throws underneath with CB Mike Jackson posting 19 PD and 4 INT, and they've covered 4 straight Wild Card games. Totals have leaned Under for CAR all year (7-10 Totals) which matters in a game lined as a double-digit spread.

PP calls for an 11 point Rams win with a total at 45, but with the Rams fav by 10.5 and the total line being 46.5 that give us no breathing room. Stafford should have no problem putting this one away but CAR loves to tighten up in the 4th so that hook may get them. The rainy and windy forecast should influence the game but as mentioned we're 1.5 points away from the total here so we'll pass on both.

FORECAST: NO PLAY LA RAMS 28 CAROLINA 17
